Dear Colleague,

As we move into July - the time of year often marked by rest and planning - those of our colleagues based in the United States or working with U.S. institutions and students have been confronted with a number of challenging Supreme Court rulings. As we reflect on what this means for international education, global learning, and broader efforts to diversify and develop more inclusive practices, we remain committed to providing our community with quality resources and tools to help continue these efforts.

For this reason, this newsletter offers a brief overview of options through Diversity Abroad to support your pursuit in acquiring knowledge, skills, and confidence to advance diversity and inclusive excellence. We hope to be able to connect with you through one — or many — of the opportunities listed below! Continue reading for more information.

Summary Report of the First Global Education Experience Student Survey

Diversity Abroad’s new Global Education Experiences Survey found that students overwhelmingly discuss their intentions to go abroad with family and peers. For advisors, this provides important information about the information students might find most helpful in preparing to go abroad. Read more about the findings to learn more about what students are reporting about their experiences throughout the education abroad process.
